

They are at the lake and all of them are in their swim trunks. Elephant's are tropical and covered in pineapples and Orangutan's trunks have bicycles on them.

Crocodile loves to go under the water and puts earplugs in so he doesn't get an ear infection, and Tiger puts on a rubber swim cap so he doesn't get his hair wet.

After a while, Orangutan suggests a game: they have to throw the ball to each other without letting it touch the water. First they have to get into a circle. Tiger and Crocodile move over towards Orangutan, when they suddenly realize that Elephant is still on the shore and hasn't even gotten into the water yet. How strange!

They're back and Crocodile and Tiger blow up their floats and make sure the nozzles are closed tight. It is very important to make sure that they work properly! Then Crocodile puts his float around one of Elephant's front legs and Tiger puts his around the other leg. With two floats they are sure he will feel safer.
