

A world of colors

We have wonderful colors in our heads. Some are light and happy, while others are dark and sad. Which ones do you like best? Oscar likes green, but not spinach green; rather lettuce green, which is lighter.

There are many, many shades of green. And brown, and orange, and blue ... Which do you think Martha likes the most? How about you?

It's shaped like a . . .

Have you ever played at guessing the shapes of the clouds? Wherever you look, you can see a thousand and one different shapes, and the same thing happens with trees. Martha has been drawing all the trees she saw in her walk through the woods. Did you notice how different they look one from the other?

Some trees are tall and thin, like giraffes. Others are short and thick, like a hippopotamus. Which trees do you know? Draw them.

Lines and colors

Putting together the shape of a tree and its main colors, Martha has made a work of art! Oscar prefers to paint the way trees change colors according to the season, or drawing lines with his markers, or making brushstrokes with all the paints he can find. But most of all, he likes finger painting! And you?
