

If you try to taste this book, your parents are sure to tell you not to. It would be silly to lick a book! Fortunately, you have other senses besides your tongue to know what things are like. You have eyes to see, ears to listen, a nose to smell, and the skin all over your body to notice the touch and feel of things around you.

I see two things that are ... GREEN! They are white underneath, they have laces, they are empty inside—unless I get my feet in them! You know what they are, don't you? With your eyes you can watch lots of things, even some that are so far away you cannot touch them, such as the clouds floating in the sky. You can see the color of things, their size, and you may even know if the things that surround you are moving or not. If they are not hidden, of course!

At night, we are so sleepy we can't keep our eyes open. Our eyelids feel heavier and heavier until finally we fall asleep. During the day, our eyelids move up and down all the time, cleaning our eyes, as if they were windshield wipers.

The sense of sight is so important that the eyes are protected by the eyelashes, which prevent dust getting in, and the eyebrows, which block the way of the drops of sweat!
