

"One of my jobs of being your big sister is to teach you all the things that I've already learned. When I was about your age, Mom and Dad took me to the fair in town. I'll never forget that day because that's the day that I learned that getting lost was no fun at all, it was scary!"
"What happened?"

“It was a hot summer day and we were all excited to be at the fair. There were people everywhere. The whole town must have been there because no matter which way we turned there were people all around us!”

"We had just arrived at the fair and as usual, Mom was holding on tightly to my hand. Dad walked ahead of us so he could clear a path through the crowd. Just as we were walking through a large group of people, I saw that my shoelace was untied. Without even thinking, I pulled my hand away from Mom's tight grasp and bent down to tie my shoe, but when I stood up Mom was gone!"
