

First we placed the broomstick in the bath. We didn't need the plug, so we took it out and we had our mainmast. Then we took the wooden stakes and nailed them together. This was the most difficult part, and it was a good thing Dad was helping me, otherwise I wouldn't have managed.

I've already made lots of voyages with my friends; we've experienced fortune and misfortune in a number of seas and oceans. Like pirates, we made a surprise attack on a boat.

One thing is for sure: I always end up returning to the same port.

"Martin, dinner time!," I hear Mum shout.

"See you on our next adventure!,"
I say before walking indoors.
