

“Do I have to be a real princess”,

the little Sucha asks herself every time somebody from the court tells her that princesses don't run, they don't shout crazily, they don't wear the clothes they like and they don't behave as she does.

“Maybe if I put socks

over the shoes the heels won’t tap with every step,” she murmurs.

And Sucha, who wants to be a refined process, does so.

clack-clack!!

Finally, with the socks placed on the high-heeled shoes, the long curtain converted into a cloak, her hair completely tangled and a little soap on her ears, Sucha decides to surprise the king and the queen.

She goes out into the garden taking little jumps and bowing.

